Affective vs. Effective Don't Confuse Them | Grammarly

Affective is an adjective formed from the noun affect, which appears quite frequently in psychology-related writing. Imagine that you're looking at someone who is experiencing a strong emotion every manifestation of that emotion you can observe is an affect. At least, that's the easiest way to understand it.

Affective vs. Effective: What's the Difference?

The verb affect (to influence) and the adjective affective (relating to moods, emotion, feelings, etc.) are wholly different in meaning. For a full discussion on the verb affect, click here.
