Both the Federal government and Australian newspapers at the time were very supportive of the tests. In 1952, the Liberal Government passed legislation, the Defence (Special Undertakings) Act 1952 , which allowed the British Government access to remote parts of Australia to undertake atmospheric nuclear weapons tests.

Attacks on Australia during World War II - Wikipedia

Due to Australia's geographic position there were relatively few attacks on Australia during World War II. [clarification needed] Axis surface raiders and submarines periodically attacked shipping in Australian waters from 1940 to early 1945 and Japanese aircraft bombed towns and airfields in Northern Australia on 97 occasions during 1942 and 1943.
