The concept of human nature is the Archimedean point of Marx's philosophy. Through a dialectical construction of this concept, he rejects the dualism between subject and object and comprehends them as the objective totality. 2 This objective totality is the totality of man and nature, 3 perceived as a historical process. Human nature, thus, consti-

Dialectics of Human Nature in Marx's Philosophy explores Karl Marx's thought without any ideological agendas, and shows the foundational role the concept of human nature plays in his philosophy. Instead of pitting Marx's humanism against materialism, dialectical and historical, Mehmet Tabak demonstrates their unity in a novel way. The result is a comprehensive account of Marx's thought which
