What to Look for When Choosing a Stainless Steel Grill

When looking at a stainless steel gas grill, feel the surface. It should have a clean finish to it. There are several finishes to stainless steel, but poorer quality stainless should feel uneven. This metal is raw from the factory and not finished. A finished surface may be brushed or smooth, but it should feel even.

FAQ Stainless Steel versus Cast Iron - Barbeques Galore

A stainless steel cooking grill will not hold the heat as well as cast iron but will last longer. Stainless steel is not anywhere near as heat-retentive as cast iron. In order to retain enough heat to cause effective searing you need more mass when using stainless steel than you would with cast iron. A large diameter stainless steel grill (at least 8mm) should hold heat well enough to sear.
